Napa's recycling manager has been named the Associate of the Year by the California Product Stewardship Council for his work promoting local recycling and sustainable efforts.

Kevin Miller received his award at Tuesday's Napa City Council meeting.

Heidi Sanborn, the council's executive director, said Miller stood out because of the time he focuses on furthering recycling programs and the relationships he has forged with other agencies.

With Miller's help, Sustainable Napa County became a partner with the Stewardship Council. He has helped educate local residents on recycling through notices in the phone books, bill inserts and presentations.

"I don't do what I do for recognition or a paycheck," Miller told the council. "I do what I do because it has meaning to me."
