

Garen Kazanjian runs the day-to-day government affairs activities at Recology, where he oversees legislative priorities, state and federal regulations, grants management, political activity, and more. He is an advocate for improving our resource ecosystems and statewide waste diversion programs, but has also worked at the operating company level conducting waste audits and setting up commercial compost and recycle programs firsthand. Garen is passionate about law and policy, having earned a degree in Political Science, spent five years in the California State Assembly working for various elected officials, and he currently attends the part time program at San Francisco's Golden Gate University School of Law. Garen and his wife are Chico State graduates, living in Marin where they enjoy hiking with their two dogs and trying new restaurants.
